Poetry.
LINES.
Suggested on the Death of the Infant of Mr. C. . . .
By —

A little lad of graceful mould,
Was just beginning to unfold
His tiny leaden to the sun,
And sip the early dew of morn.

It grew with a wide portress,
With many a flower of fragrance rare;
But sickly clouds o'ercast the ground,
And poisonous weeds were strewn around.

The lovely plant, too pure for earth,
As though it was of aethereal birth,
Taken from a heavenly soil,
To beautify and cheer our world.

Twice, for soon the garden came,
And bore it back to heaven again;
And left the parent stem to pine
In sorrow over the broken vine.

Transplanted to its native soil,
Fair exotics of Paradise;
'Twill bloom in fresher beauty now,
Where living waters gently flow.

Newmarket, Sept. 1859.

BAPTISM.
O! was my Saviour understood,
He is the author of all good;
By him alone we live, and see
What things have been and yet will be.

He is our Judge and doth baptize—
As he doth call the dead to rise;
As he renews all ages past,
And makes the first to be the last.

'Tis him alone the soul doth hear,
He gives the mind a listening ear;
And every heart he doth renew,
That hears his word—his way pursue.

He in the heart doth find a place,
To sow in man the seeds of grace;
And there he plants and gathers in,
And saves the soul from every sin.

Then do we know that Christ's voice—
In midst he comes all our foes;
And he doth righteous garments wear,
Clear as the sun or morning star.

He makes our lives again new—
His Father's will he doth pursue;
Nor spotted garments doth he wear,
Nor specked garments doth he wear.

To every set he's bright and clear,
No sin doth dwell with him;
He's living in this present time;
In Adam all the living sleep.

Like him, we all have cause to weep,
Till Jesus to our soul return
To teach us, all have cause to mourn,
And him that doth of wisdom boast,
His never known the Holy Ghost—
Blessed with the Father and the Son—
Knows not what's been, or is to come.
There's many preaching, teaching us,
They truly give us light to see;
The plant we sown again arise,
And they can teach and can chastise;
And ancient garments they can wear,
Without the Scriptures they have here,
Oh! what a doleful noise they make,
The heavens move—the earth doth shake;
And then that faith a sandy frame,
Is often moving in their name.
But he's baptized that never moves,
But every time he still improves.
It's not the dust the Lord doth hear,
It's the spirit's listening ear;
And then the heart from death doth rise,
And every sin doth God chastise;
And this is called the coming day,
When all our sins shall flee away.

D. WILSON.

Literature.
Annie Gordon's Love.
BY BELLE FLORENCE.
S—, Feb. 18th, 18—.

To you, and you only, dear Mabel, have I always opened my heart. I have thought that the period of my life had passed in which the passions of my impulsive soul had power to move me. With the history of my early, and my only love, you are already acquainted. Ah! yes, Mabel, you were my friend, my counsellor, my comfort during those trying years. You know how earnestly, how entirely I loved Henry Wilton; and how I buried that love in my heart, and turned coldly from him, when I discovered that my youngest sister—the sweet, gentle Nellie—had, despite her eager struggles to retain it, yielded her heart to his keeping. How that, chilled by my coldness, he turned to her; how her gentle, quiet nature—her pure, stainless soul, from his most earnest love and how, when my own heart was consumed, I stood by her side, calm and cold as a statue, and listened to the words that bound these two lives together.

A few years afterwards our father died, and that same year a second daughter was given to Nellie and Henry. With the advent of the little stranger the mother began to fade; and soon it was evident that that fatal disease which had taken our dear mother from us when we were children, was feeding upon the life-stings of our darling Nellie. Then I went to her; and as week after week passed, and I saw her slowly but surely fading, and witnessed the untiring devotion with which her husband watched so tenderly, affectionately, yet sadly over her, who had been my heart's idol since the days of early childhood, my heart went out to him with a sister's pure passionless love; and I thanked "our Father" for giving my darling sister so generous a protector.

When I saw him force back his heart's own bitter agony, that he might speak cheering words to his dying wife, pointing her to the blissful fields of Paradise, which stretch so gloriously beyond the dark river, where the pure spirit would await the coming of earth's loved ones; and, pointing with an angel eloquence to the equiptured reunion, till the pale features of the dying one grew radiant, and the fading eyes brilliant in participation of the glories described; I blushed for my own unworthy love, and felt that, for a thousand worlds, I would not come between those two hearts. When she placed her two darling children in my arms, and bade me be a mother to them, even as I had been to her, I clasped the tender limbs to my bosom; and kneeling by the couch of the dying mother, I solemnly and devoutly consecrated myself to the work of fearfully, guiding, watching over them tenderly, affectionately, faithfully, as I know she would do could she be spared to them. And when we stood by her death-bed, and she placed my hand in that of her husband, and bade me love him too, I promised that I would be all to him that a faithful, loving sister could be. Her fading eyes turned wistfully upon me, and then upon Henry, and her lips moved, as though she would speak; but the angel of death struck off the fetters of mortality, and her spirit sought its rest.

You stood by my side, Mabel, when we laid her reverently in the churchyard; you witnessed the overwhelming agony of the bereaved husband, and to you I breathed the emotion of my soul as I entered upon my life-work.

Ten years are passed, Mabel, and they have been years of peace and comparative happiness. I have been steadily, unwaveringly accomplishing my life-mission. If, at times, my heart has yearned for a nearer and dearer place in the love of Henry Wilton, I have stifled that feeling by believing that the place Nellie once occupied in his heart, is now filled by the spirit presence of the sainted one.

But an event has occurred, Mabel, that has stirred the ashes of my dead love, and the buried corpse has arisen from its grave, and refuses again to be entombed. A spirit, dashing widow has come to me, who, it is rumored, was the object of Henry's boyish love. She had laid siege to his heart, and I fear, is making a conquest. I know that he often visits her, and it is said they are engaged, and will be married in the early spring. She has four children—a disolute son, some twenty years of age, and three pert, dashing daughters.

Al! Mabel, if this is true, I cannot stay here; for, though I might carry still farther the work of self-satisfaction, for the sake of my dear children, I feel that I shall not be welcome. Heaven forbid that I misjudge her; but she seems to me haughty, odd and heartless, and looks with a covetous eye upon our pleasant home. I cannot, I will not believe it. As yet I have learned nothing from Henry, and it is a subject I can never broach to him.

I have carefully concealed these things from my darlings. Heaven avert the blow that threatens more fully develop. 'Till then, Mabel, pray for me; pray; pray; and write to me, Mabel, kindly, tenderly, gently as of old. Your unhappy
ANNIE.

Two months are passed, Mabel, in which I have suffered years of agony; but it is gone now, and my heart is too happy to dwell upon its past sorrows. Until to-night it seemed certain that the peace of our home circle was about to be invaded. I will tell you how it came about. Henry has regularly visited the widow. She seemed to possess a strangely fascinating power over him, and no doubt, was sure of accomplishing her purpose. She even went so far as to boast of the conquest, and hint that when she became the mistress of Henry Wilton's home, there would be surprising changes wrought. That the house should be thoroughly repaired; and that "that old maid would have to leave instantly; and those little misses learn that there were persons in the house of equal consequence with themselves." Fortunately, this came to Henry's ears, and had the effect to dispel the charm she had thus thrown artfully around him, and to enable him to study her character closely and impartially.

Many times, of late, upon looking up suddenly, I have encountered Henry's eager, inquiring gaze. After tea, this evening, instead of going out, as usual, he retired to his library. When I had seen my darlings sweetly sleeping in their bed, I went to my room. For some time I listened to the sound of Henry's steps, as he paced up and down the floor of the library, which was directly under my room. A sickening feeling of despair came over me, as I remembered that I had suffered, and thought how I must continue to suffer till death should release me. I almost doubted the wisdom and goodness of that Providence which had permitted my life to be thus blighted; and, bowing my head upon the table, I wept bitter, scalding tears. I was aroused by the entrance of the servant, who came to say that Mr. Wilton wished to see me in the library. Without lifting my head, I replied that I would come down soon. When again alone I rose, bathed my eyes, and strove to conceal all trace of grief. I summoned all the energy of soul to meet him whom I had daily met in the family circle for many years. I felt sure that his object in sending for me was to tell me of his intention of marrying the widow; and I trembled that I should not have strength to bear it without betraying my own sentiments; but composing myself as best I could, I went down.

Henry was still pacing up and down the room, but, as I entered, he paused, and handed me to a seat; then, without saying a word, resumed his walk. I waited a few minutes for him to speak; then, fearing there might have been some mistake, I asked if he had sent for me.

"Yes, Annie, I did send for you," he replied, as he paused before me, and gazed earnestly into my face.

I tried to be calm, but trembled violently, and cast my eyes to the carpet.

"Annie, do you know why I have sent for you?" he asked.

"Not exactly," I replied; "but I thought it might be to speak with me concerning your approaching marriage."

"Yes; but would you advise me to marry the widow Marshall?"

"I do not know, brother; do not ask me, but be guided by your own judgment; consult your own happiness, and that of your children."

"But do you wish me to marry her?" I asked.

"Oh, no! Henry, no! that is, unless she is necessary to your happiness."

"But are you not engaged to her?" I asked.

"I have never mentioned the subject of marriage to her," he replied; "but I might have been led to do so had I not seen her character in its true light."

"Your words have lifted a burden from my heart," said I. "I feared she was not the person to make your home happy, and with whom to trust your children. Then we are to live on in the old way, are we, Henry?"

"Annie," and his voice trembled violently. "You have supplied the place of a faithful, devoted mother to my children; why not become such in reality?" You have been a mother, loving sister; you would your soul revolve from sustaining a nearer—a dearer relation? I have long wished to say this to you, but something in your manner led me to believe that such a proposal would be distasteful to you; and as I remembered that, when I would have sought your love, you turned coldly from me, I feared that such a proposition would render situation here disagreeable, and I refrained from mentioning the subject. Even now I have little to expect but your rejection. I loved you first, Annie; but your coldness chilled me; while the gentle, winning grace of our angel Nellie drew my heart to her. Can you forgive the alienation of the past few months, and accept the heart that has long regarded you with the deepest affection?"

Then, Mabel, with my heart resting upon his bosom, I told him all. I do not know what language I used; I only know that the most ardent recesses of my soul were thrown open to his inspection, and that I laid the burden of my heart had so long borne at his feet. It was a long story, and interrupted by many sobs and tears; but he listened in silence, only clasping me closer to his heart as I proceeded. Long, long I lay sobbing upon his bosom.

Mabel, you know what it is to be beloved by your heart's chosen one! But you have never buried loved a cold corpse in a deep grave in your heart, over which you have planted many sweet flowers of memory, and watered them with showers of unshed tears, till it seemed that your very heart's blood were turned to bitter gall. You have never seen the grave open, and your dead love spring forth, a living, vital essence, and with one wild, glad bound, meet and embrace the object that first called it into existence. Then, Mabel, you cannot fully conceive of the intensity of the upgushing emotions that filled my soul as I listened to words of endearment from his lips, and felt the loving pressure of his arm.

Morning had already begun to dawn in the east when I sought my chamber, but not to sleep. Joy like mine knows no fatigue, and I would not till I had told you the story of my great happiness. On the tenth of May we are to repeat before the world, the vows that last night were registered in Heaven, and over which I am sure the gentle spirit of our Nellie will rejoice, if she is permitted to behold them. Come to me then, Mabel, and bring your husband and sweet children. I wish you all to be participants in my joy.

Just now a strange ringlet falls upon my paper, among whose dark waves are mingled a few threads of silver; but I feel that my heart is young as when, in the freshness of early womanhood, I first gave it to the keeping of Henry Wilton. The bright rays of the morning sun are streaming in through my window, and my pet canary is halting it with a joyous burst of melody, which chimes harmoniously with my own glad heart-song. And now I hear the sound of springing feet coming lightly down the stairs, and my dear children bound into my room, with a glad good-morning for their "aunt." Sweet darlings! I feel that they are now truly mine. Oh! how full of life, and joy, and sadness, I this morning feel to be this precious existence. I hasten to offer up my prayer of praise to the great Giver of all these blessings.

Ever your
ANNIE.

Our Brother that Died.
Long ago, on a golden Autumn,
When the reapers bound the sheaves,
And the North wind from the forest
Stripped the gold and crimson leaves;
Then across the golden threshold,
Came the "angel reaper," bold,
And he wrapped our little brother,
Closely in his mantle fold.

But, by faith, we know he took him,
Far beyond the ether line,
Where the clouds of gold and azure
Hide the eternal gates of heaven,
And we know, by life's bright river,
In green pastures, sweetly fair,
Closely packed with many white flowers,
He is closing our brother there.

Meet him on the ether's homelands,
Where life's flowers forever bloom,
When we, too, have crossed the portals
Each in closing of the tomb.
Through life's chaina has one link lives
Which we cannot sever,
Yes, this thought sweet lullaby gives,
Pale can never reach him there.

Amusements.

The following comic epistle may be seen in the window of a London coffee shop, "Stolen from this window a Chien cup and saucer; who is being now in complete, the thief may have the remainder at a bargain."

"Dick," said a certain lawyer to a countryman, who was considered more fool than a horse, "what should you call the world?" "The greatest curiosity in the world," replied Dick, "an honest lawyer and a river on fire."

"Charley, my dear," said a loving mother to her hopeful son, just budding into breeches, "Charley, my dear, come here and get some candy." "I guess I won't mind now, mother," replied Charley, "I've got some tobacco."

A man went to the mayor yesterday with the complaint that his money had been stolen while he was asleep. "But why did you sleep while the thieves were about you?" asked the mayor. "Because, sir, I was mistaken—I thought that you and your eubordinates kept awake."

A friend of the ladies.—A letter received from a young man who left Galt for California last summer, has in it the following strange passage:—"Blessed as it may appear to you and other residents in Canada, it is a fact that during the year that I have been in California, I have never met or spoken to a single unmarried female." There's a chance for you, ladies!

The Latest Fashions.—Hats and Hoops have been all the rage with the ladies for some time past, and still being in progress, another tier of hoops has now been added just around the hips; and to show that Canadian ladies are not to be beat by the French in addition to the dress, the elegant and the new, now worn instead of the old, is the dress of the fashion in the high heel of an inch, an inch and a half or two inches, by which they endeavour to elevate their undergarments. The new Hoops, Hery, and the Starlet Shawl.

Quitting a Marriage.—A recently married young man in Cincinnati got intoxicated at a wine party, and in that state went home to his wife. As soon as she appeared she leaped from the sofa, on which she had been lying reclining, and throwing her alabaster arms about his neck, inquired, "Are you ill, dearest?" "What is it you do not seem to be yourself?" "Well the truth is—that—that I want to sit up with a sick brother, belonging to our family, and you see, my love, and I—light light weight and giving him brandy, and the doctor had just prescribed—I must have said—a mistake—a mistake in the dark—dark and taken the liquor myself; while—while I should—should—have—have—hand—hand to my friend—very sorry, my dear. This explanation was very satisfactory, especially to the husband, who sat down on his bed and fell asleep.

Marrying at Large.

One of our Justices of the Peace was recently called to a German house in the city to marry a couple. Putting on a clean collar, and putting a marriage certificate in his pocket, he started for the festive scene. Arrived at the house, under the direction of a blue-legged, little boy, who pointed out the place, he knocked and went in. In the middle of the floor stood a stout German girl, merry and plump, her blue eyes rolling out tears as large as butterpeas.

"What is the matter?" said the sympathetic judge. "Matter," said the girl, "Dat Gottlieb went off, and wouldn't marry me, ain't it bed?" "The justice said he supposed it was, and inquired that he had come to marry some one, and requested the old lady to bring on the lamb to the sacrifice. Old lady said: "Daive was no lamb—Gottlieb ish run off, and will not marry my Katerina."

"Well," said the justice, "Gottlieb isn't the only man that is sent for some other man to marry."

At last Katerina's face brightened up, and she ejaculated: "Vah, dat is good; send mit Hens."

"Hens was sent for, but couldn't come. When her messenger returned, Katerina, determined not to let it up, said: "Send mit Sloopeh."

Sloopeh was sent for, but he couldn't be found. Katerina's heart fell at this news, and the justice was growing impatient. Just then Katerina looked out of the window, and saw a short, thick, young German going by, when she rushed to the door, and hallooed: "Friit! Friit!"

Fritz shortly made his appearance at the door, when Katerina's mother said: "Friit, you lose my Katerina!"

Fritz allowed her to do more as she pleased. "Then stand up here," thundered the justice; and before Fritz could realize his position, he was a man and wife, and Katerina's arms were around his neck, and her lips pressed to his, she crying between the calculations: "Mein husband—mein Fritz!"

Our day is a correct historian, compels us to know how Fritz begged back as well as he could. The justice, with head erect, stepped smiling out, leaving the lovers to the flycatcher, and walked away, mediocrity, a lady who stealing all over his massive proportions, the consciousness of having done his duty gleaming in his eye, and honor, honesty and rectitude in his footsteps.

A CRUEL JOKE.—The Leader says it is rumored that Sir Edward Head is to be raised to the peerage.

A PEAK OF FROST.—Yesterday morning early, a most severe frost destroyed the tops of the horticulturists in this neighborhood. The ice was an inch thick in standing water, and the consequence was that all the melons (one gentleman had 1500) all the tomatoes, and all like productions were utterly destroyed; to say nothing of the late flowers. Such a complete devastation was never before experienced in Canada.—(Kingston Paper.)

Wishing to know the ropes.—The Rochester Democrat says:—"Yesterday a young girl about fifteen years old, came to the office of Mr. Webster, where her parents resided, and inquired for Mr. T. F. Webb, the rope walker, who lived at the Falls, and at the Exchange Hotel, where he boarded, and at once, referring to tell anybody what her father was, she said: 'I have heard that he was a rope walker, and I want to know if he is.'"

The treaty they adopt is the result of upwards of thirty years' extensive and successful practice in London.

A Most Scientific Invention.

An instrument for the cure of Genital Debility, or Nocturnal Emissions, more properly known as Seminal Weakness, &c. can be permanently cured in from fifteen days to two months by the use of this instrument, when used conjointly with medicines.

Young Men, take Particular Notice.

DR. AMOS & SON take pleasure in announcing that they have invented a most important instrument for the cure of the above diseases. It has been subjected to a test by the most eminent physicians in London, Paris, Philadelphia, and New York; it has been declared the only useful instrument ever invented for the cure of Seminal Weakness, or any disease of the genital organs, caused by the coarser habits of youth.

DR. AMOS & SON, in order to satisfy the most skeptical as to the merits of this instrument, pledge themselves that in any instance where it may prove unsatisfactory after a fair trial, the money will be refunded by returning the instrument in good order.

Persons wishing to know the merits of this instrument will observe that the price, with the accompanying directions securely packed and sent by express, is ten dollars.

NEW REMEDIES AND QUICK CURES.

For the Venereal Diseases and all Private Complaints—glands, stricture, seminal weakness, pains in the loins, affection of the Kidneys, diseases of head and throat, nose, and skin, and of these dreadful affections arising from a social habit of youth, which process constitutional debility, render marriage impossible, and in the end destroy both body and mind.

The treatment they adopt is the result of upwards of thirty years' extensive and successful practice in Europe and America.

COUNTRY INVALIDS.

Persons in any part of the world may be successfully treated by forwarding a correct detail of their case, with a certificate for medicine, &c.

CURRICULIAN'S HAIR INVIGORATOR.

THE only Preparation ever invented that will Effectually Restore, and promote the Growth of the Hair. The discovery was accidentally made by using it on the head of a man who, in consequence of which he lost most of his hair. He not only found himself cured of the painful disease, but his agreeable surprise, his hair was again restored in full, being now thick, glossy, and soft, and about two feet long, hanging in beautiful curls about his shoulders. A living testimony of his newly discovered remedy. This is also a certain remedy for Pimples and Itch on the Face.

He would invite the attention of the Public to the following Testimonials:

From Mr. Joseph B. Willson. 4th Co. of Whitechurch, June 8, 1858.

FRIEND GRISWOLD.—Having tried your Curriculian or Hair Invigorator, I do believe it to be very beneficial to the head and hair, as prescribed on the bottle. When I commenced using it, my hair commenced to grow, and I found it to be very good, and I also believe it to be very good for the hair on the head.

From Mrs. Steler. Elder's Corner, 4th Co. Whitechurch. June 11, 1858.

Mrs. R. W. Griswold.—Some ten years since I was afflicted with the Itch on the head, which was at times very severe, leaving my head in a very itchy and feverish condition. Not long after this my hair commenced falling off very fast, until the sides of my head were entirely bare, and as much as I could do, I kept my head covered with a cap, and I found it to be very good, and I also believe it to be very good for the hair on the head.
